HUNTING AREA

The hunting days will occur in a beautiful island. There are few more spectacular hunting areas in the world than this Croatian island. There are three hunting zones and during the hunt you can enjoy views over many of the surrounding islands in the picturesque Adriatic Sea. Since this is an open hunting ground, with rocks and small plants, goats and sheep hunting is specially interesting and exciting. A slightly rugged area with a dense growth of Maquis shrub and hidden areas of grass provides the ideal habitat for this game species. What makes this unforgettable hunt particularly attractive is that, as the hunting district is next to the coast, you always have a view over the sea. Despite the rugged nature of the area, hunting can be organised without any great physical effort. The hunter's ballistic skills are very important. The shooting distance is usually 150-200 metres, but can exceed 200 metres. The hunt is arranged in the morning, at first light and in the afternoon. Outside the summer season it is possible to hunt all day. In the summer months it is usually too warm during the day and the animals start to move when the temperature cools down.

DALMATIAN OVAN OR WILD SHEEP

Dalmatian wild sheep also called Dalmatian ovan is one progenitor of our domestic sheep. Dalmatian sheep are native to the Dalmatian Islands off the Croatian coast. For centuries they were used domestically by peasants, but in the 18th Century, most of the people left the islands to find jobs on the mainland. Since that time these sheep have gone back to the wild and are extremely wary. Currently scientists only recognize the islands of Dugi Otok and Otok Plavnic as having pure Dalmatian Wild Sheep populations. SCI follows the scientific ruling when accepting entries for this Ovis species.

FERAL GOAT

These are domestic goats living in the wild, either from releases or escapes from confinement. Domestic goats have been introduced throughout the world and have become feral in many areas. Feral goats include many domestic breeds, therefore a variety of colors, body types and horn configurations may be seen. The horns (both sexes) resemble horizontal corkscrews, rising somewhat from the skull, and then sweeping outward in a tight homonymous spiral of up to three turns.

KRI KRI HYBRID IBEX

These ibex are a cross-breed between the "Kri-Kri Ibex" and a "Feral Goat". They live in the wild, many of these populations have been feral for centuries. His shoulder height about 32 inches. Weight 100-140 pounds. Males grow a large, shaggy chin beard. The Kri-Kri (Hybrid) ibex browses on leaves, twigs and weeds and is therefore a highly destructive feeder. Able to climb trees and feed in the branches. They are diurnal and all their senses are good. These are sturdy, powerful animals with an outer coat of long, coarse hair and undercover of fine wool. The coloration is very specific for these animals: yellowish-clear tan body color, with a distinctive "black cross" going from the front limbs across the center of the body towards the hind legs. Warning: "Hybrid Ibex" that show a different coloration or have more than two skin colors will be classified by SCI as "Feral Goat ( Europe )." The Kri-Kri (Hybrid) ibex have a distinctive horn formation: they rise upward and backward from the skull, and then spread sideways in a tight homonymous spiral.

AXIS DEER - CHITAL

Chital of unknown genetic origin were introduced to Dalmatian islands in 1911, where they still occur today. The population nowadays amounts to 200 units. Attempts by hunters to introduce the species to the mainland of Croatia were unsuccessful.
